Editorial Review

From School Library Journal

Grade 4-8-Miniskirts and leisure suits, Vietnam War protests, and the first Earth Day are some of the selected significant highlights of these tumultuous decades. Information appears in a few paragraphs and in substantial picture captions almost amounting to full sidebars. Large, archival black-and-white photographs, many with jagged or faded edges or with a subject cut out against the pages, give the volumes the look of a scrapbook or yearbook. While none of the topics are presented in great detail, enough facts are offered to give readers at least a glimpse at life in these times. With an emphasis on the United States, memorable events and personalities are arranged in categories such as "Lifestyles, Fashion, and Fads"; "The Arts and Entertainment"; "Sports"; "Politics at Home and Abroad"; "Environmental Issues"; and "Science, Technology, and Medicine." These headings work for the most part. However, in The 1970s, the short pieces on Black Pride, Hispanic-American Pride, the American Indian Movement, and Women's Liberation appear in the "Lifestyles, Fashion, and Fads" section. Overall, the tone is breezier than in the "Our Century" series (Gareth Stevens, 1993). Internet sites listed seem well chosen to provide more in-depth information on a few of the major events mentioned in the texts and about each decade as a whole.
