From dust jacket: Skinheads Shaved for Battle investigates the world of young American men and women—sometimes boys and girls—who helped form the most significant and violent new hate group of the 1980s. Bound together far more by common beliefs and attitudes than by structural links, racist skinheads (non-racist skinheads also exist) developed during the decade from a greatly splintered and marginal presence on the punk scene to become a highly explosive, dominating force praised and courted by the country's older, more established right wing extremist organizations.
