Editorial Review

Review

A capable cast supports Julie Harris, whose moving performance may arguably be the best of her career. -- Booklist

Also from LA Theatre Works is Arthur Miller's "All My Sons." Another Audie Award-winner, this production stars Julie Harris, James Farantino and Ayre Gross.

Written and produced in 1947, this is a hard-hitting story, set shortly after World War II, about Joe Keller, who became rich as a manufacturer of substandard war materials in a conflict that took one of his sons and imprisoned a colleague. -- St. Louis Post Dispatch

About the Author

When Arthur Miller burst upon the theatre world with this 1947 play, he established his position as the leading playwright of his generation. Simultaneously, he made a brilliant case for his contention that the American theatre could encompass tragedy equal in stature to that of the ancient Greeks. The heroes, he maintained, were not the kings and gods of antiquity, but the everyday working people of this country. Miller had begun writing plays as a student at the University of Michigan and had won several awards (one of which he shared with his contemporary, Tennessee Williams), but his first Broadway play lasted for only five performances in 1944. He authored several radio scripts before ALL MY SONS opened and became his first Broadway hit. Two years later, DEATH OF A SALESMAN won him the Pulitzer Prize. He remains a vital force in today's theatre. "The stage," he writes, "is the place for ideas, for philosophies, for the most intense discussions of man's fate."
