Prophetic Obedience: Ecclesiology for a Dialogical Church By Bradford E. Hinze

Drawing on the documents of Vatican II as well as biblical, theological, and spiritual resources, Hinze seeks to develop a deeper understanding of what it means to foster prophetic obedience in the contemporary church. In the spirit of works by Johann Baptist Metz, Ignacio Ellacuría, Jon Sobrino, Dean Brackley, and Sandra Schneiders, this book advances a practical fundamental ecclesiology that combines a constructive theological argument with an argument for greater lay participation and grassroots democracy in the church.

Editorial Review

Review

Hinze lays out a biblically rich, theologically well-argued, and experientially rooted model of baptismal participation in the prophetic identity and mission of Christ. He rightly hopes that such a theology of prophetic obedience rather than servile submission can help the Church address such negative signs of the times as the alienation within and even from the Church of young people, women, and ethnically marginalized people. --Sandra Schneiders, author, The Revelatory Text

"... our great dignity derives from baptism, which is accessible to all." Brad Hinze's brilliant, challenging, and sensitive book might well be described as a sustained reflection or a set of variations on this key phrase from Pope Francis's Evangelii Gaudium. A church of dialogue needs always to be a church of prophecy--both ad extra and ad intra--and so it has to be a church as well of prophetic obedience. Hinze makes this point with compelling illustrations and persuasive theology. --Stephen B. Bevans, author, An Introduction to Theology in Global Perspective

A mandatory book for the whole theological community, but most of all for the laity. Hinze's excellent reflections will stimulate the people of God to believe they are producers, and not just consumers, of the symbolic goods the Gospel displays through the Church for all. --Maria Clara Bingemer, Pontifical Catholic University of Rio de Janeiro
